

Don't Let Others Decide Your Future

When people feel ignored, disappointed, or frustrated by decisions affecting their communities, the temptation is to tune out. But that's exactly when participation matters most.

The officials who make those decisions are accountable to voters. The best way to hold them accountable is not by staying home—it's by showing up.

Make sure you know when, where, and how you'll vote. If your polling location has changed, check before Election Day and encourage others to do the same.

And don't overlook the August 18 School Board Primary Election. The decisions made by School Board members affect students, families, teachers, and the future of our community. These races are often decided by very small margins.

When communities vote, communities have power. Let's make sure our voices are heard—loudly, clearly, and at the ballot box.

Don't give away your power. Use it. Vote on August 18.
